Gala Fundraising Concert

DMV helps charity raise $100,000 for the Canberra Hospital
by Francesco Sofo

On September 5th, the Dante Musica Viva Choir will perform in a very special concert – trying to raise $100,000 for the Newborn Intensive Care Foundation at The Canberra Hospital.

On 28th December 2012, our daughter Allegra was born prematurely and critically ill. She was suffering from Intra-Uterine Growth Retardation, a condition that saw her nearly starve to death whilst in-utero. The statistics for babies born with this condition are sobering – at least 1 in 5 will be stillborn, and those that do survive often experience social, biological and cognitive developmental issues (1).

We were fortunate to have access to Canberra-based neonatal intensive care facilities where

And this is Allegra!

Allegra could be tube-fed and monitored around the clock by a team of specialists. On the evening of Allegra's birth, I sat down and composed some music, and this hobby has become a very enjoyable therapeutic pursuit during Allegra's varied treatments, surgeries and hospitalisations.

There are more than 47,000 babies across Australia requiring some form of special or intensive neonatal care similar to that received by Allegra. Of these babies, more than 800 are treated in Canberra and the Newborn Intensive Care Foundation works tirelessly (and voluntarily) to raise money to purchase new equipment to help these sick and premature babies.

On Boxing Day 2014, I was visiting my sister (a music teacher) in Melbourne, and we were reminiscing about the Italian fairytales that our mother used to tell us. My mother never attended school, yet she managed to educate her 7 children and countless grandchildren by imparting oral history and stories. My sister and I agreed that one of our favourite fairytales was 'Peter and the Ox' which we found in an Italian Folktales book written by Italo Calvino. Given our musical interests, we jokingly suggested that we should each put the fairytale to music and then compare compositions (a little friendly competition to see whose was better!). I subsequently engaged Melbourne-based poet John Camillo to write the libretto, and over the next 9 months I wrote my first opera.

My operatic interpretation of this fairy tale has become known as The Tale of Cicerino (cicerino meaning little chick pea). My interpretation sees Carmela, wife of farmer Agostino cursed by the local gypsies with chick peas boiling out of the pot as screaming little imps which she crushes in the pestle except for one little boy chick pea. In four Acts, The Tale of Cicerino includes the escapades and ingenuity of Cicerino who is swallowed by a horse and then by a wolf but is subsequently blown out when the wolf passes wind after having gorged itself on equine carcasses. Cicerino outwits three thieves and finishes up with a fortune of gold for his parents and then is married to the queen of the gypsies who is transformed into a beautiful princess and he into a handsome prince.

In October 2014, we came up with the idea of holding a fundraising concert featuring the Dante Musica Viva where my original compositions can be played and we can raise funds for the Newborn Intensive Care Foundation. What has resulted is a gala fundraising concert on Saturday 5th September at Llewellyn Hall. Our line-up is remarkable, including the full National Capital Orchestra under the direction of award-winning conductor Leonard Weiss; performances by soprano Louise Page OAM, Rachael Duncan, Adelaide's Jeremy Thatchell and tenor Steve Amosa; and a massed choir of 200 singers from the Canberra Choral Society, the Llewellyn Choir, SCUNA and our own Dante Musica Viva.

All artists, performers and organisers are donating their talent and time so the maximum can be raised for the Foundation. Genevieve Jacobs from 666 ABC Radio will host the evening, and we are grateful for major sponsorships received from the ACT Government, Australian National University, Icon Water and Beyond Bank. The timing of the concert is perfect as 2015 marks the 20th anniversary of the Newborn Intensive Care Foundation, and we have been very fortunate to have the full support and encouragement of the Foundation's Founder and Chair Peter Cursley in making this dream concert a reality.

I would like to encourage members of the Dante Alighieri Society to get behind this great cause, and to join us for a wonderful evening of Italian opera and other well-known arias and duets such as Adele's Laughing Song from Die Fledermaus, Torna a Surriento, Nessun Dorma and Don Giovanni's La ci darem la mano.

Tickets are available from Ticketek, and 100% of the ticket price is being donated to the Newborn Intensive Care Foundation.

Let's look at the useful little word ci – it has so many roles to play in Italian!

Ci si accorge subito che ha un accento straniero. One notices straight away that he/she has a foreign accent (accorgersi = to notice, to realise). In this case ci is used as part of the subject when you use reflexive verbs in the impersonal construction (one does/sees/comes etc).

Ci siamo accorti che è arrivato in ritardo. We noticed that he arrived late (reflexive verb – io mi sono accorto, tu ti sei accorto, lui/lei si è ... etc).

Ci viene a trovare tutti i giorni or viene a trovarci tutti i giorni. He visits us every day (ci = us, used as a direct object pronoun).

Non ci voglio più andare in quel ristorante: il servizio è pessimo. I don't want to go to that restaurant any more: the service is awful. Ci sei stato anche tu? Have you been there too? (ci=there – denoting location).

Then look at these different examples of the use of sentire/sentirsi = to hear, feel.

Maria si sente male oggi. Mary doesn't feel well today (sentirsi bene/male = to feel well/unwell).

Ci si sente a disagio in questo ambiente. One feels ill at ease in this environment.

Maria non sente niente: è del tutto sorda! Maria can't hear a thing: she's completely deaf! (note the double negative at the start of the sentence).

Hai sentito l'ultima? È affondata un'altra barca di rifugiati nel Mediterraneo. Have you heard the latest? Another boat of refugees has sunk in the Mediterranean sea.

Leonardo Sinisgalli is a poet and painter of the 20th century. Born in Basilicata in 1908, he moved to Rome to study engineering and mathematics and then to Milan to work as an architect and graphic artist. He died in Rome in 1981. He was a close friend of Giuseppe Ungaretti (a poet) and of Scipione (a painter), and was a member of the Expressionist art movement Scuola Romana. In his early poetry, Sinisgalli focused on themes from ancestral myths, but later adopted a more relaxed style. His language is plain and his voice gentle, as in this poem.

A mio padre

L'uomo che torna solo
a tarda sera dalla vigna scuote le rape nella vasca sbuca dal viottolo con la paglia macchiata di verderame.
L'uomo che porta così fresco terriccio sulle scarpe, odore di fresca sera nei vestiti si ferma a una fonte, parla con l'ortolano che sradica i finocchi.

E un uomo, un piccolo uomo
ch'io guardo di lontano.
E un punto vivo all'orizzonte.
Forse la sua pupilla
si accende questa sera accanto alla peschiera dove si asciuga la fronte.

English translation by Rita Ferrarelli in Sinisgalli's I saw the Muses.

Lettura di poesie italiane

Domenica, 11 ottobre - 2pm

Vi piace recitare Dante? O il poeta romano Trilussa? O il triste Giacomo Leopardi? Oppure vi piace ascoltare altri che recitano?

Abbiamo prenotato la Manning Clark House per la lettura di poesie italiane. L'invito ci era stato esteso l'anno scorso da Sebastian, uno dei figli di Manning Clark e tuttora Chairman of the Manning Clark House Board.

Se avete una poesia preferita – o più di una – mettetevi in contatto con me (yvette_devlin@iprimus.com.au) per dirmi cosa vi piacerebbe leggere e di quanti minuti avete bisogno. Nell'arco di due ore, con una breve pausa alle 3 pm, dovremmo poter ascoltare una ventina di lettori se ognuno impiega una media di cinque minuti.

Durante la pausa ci sarà un piccolo rinfresco. Ingresso: $5 per coprire le spese del rinfresco.

Si tratta di un pomeriggio informale al quale sono invitati i nostri soci e simpatizzanti. Anche se recitare poesie non è per voi, venite ad ascoltare gli altri! Vi aspetto numerosi!

The garden in the ancient Roman World

A presentation by Emeritus Professor Elizabeth Minchin by Susan Reye

The guest speaker at our cultural event on 16 July 2015 was Emeritus Professor Elizabeth Minchin of the ANU's Centre for Classical Studies. She gave a fascinating presentation on the domestic gardens of the ancient Romans, focusing on the area around Mt Vesuvius in the decades before it erupted in 79 AD.

From the earliest years of the ancient Roman civilisation, Prof Minchin told us, small farm-houses had their own hortus - a herb and vegetable plot and/or orchard. Even in the city of Rome itself, apartment dwellers had gardens in the form of window boxes for herbs and vegetables. The tradition was maintained in Pompeii's earliest homes, which had a hortus at the back of the house. This was a private, interior space, included within the walls which surrounded the whole block of land on which the house was built.

Then, from the 2nd century BC, influenced by Greek practice, Roman houses began to include a colonnaded courtyard - a peristyle. The Romans used it to bring light into the house, with a direct sightline into the atrium. Whereas in the Greek world, courtyards were plain and unembellished, the Romans filled their peristyles with plants and garden ornaments. Greek stonemasons were kept busy producing statues for peristyle gardens - wonderful works of art for the rich, while large numbers of cheaper copies and adaptations were produced for the mass market.

In the late 1st century BC or early 1st century AD, following the construction of an aqueduct from Mt Vesuvius, gardens in Pompeii began to be planned around a water feature, such as a fountain or pool. Examination of the surviving lead pipes shows that the aqueduct water went principally to the garden, well-water being used within the house. The ready availability of water also affected the choice of plants. Previously, gardens contained mostly trees and ivy that search for water themselves, but with the advent of the aqueduct, low ornamental plants began to be planted, to frame a view or lead the eye to a water feature - box hedges, myrtle, plane trees, acanthus, cypress and rosemary. Greenery predominated over flowers.

But the Romans did not abandon the idea of the practical, productive garden. Many houses had a hortus behind the peristyle and some peristyle gardens contained fruit trees.

So how do we know what was planted in these gardens 2000 years ago?

Until recently, Prof Minchin told us, the only sources of information about Roman gardens were descriptions in the letters of Pliny the Younger, the stunning wall paintings preserved at Pompeii and Herculaneum, and observations of the remains of 450 or so houses in Pompeii which had had gardens. These sources had their limitations. Pliny was writing about the huge gardens attached to his country villas, rather than small domestic town gardens. The wall paintings show not real, but ideal, gardens. And although many ancient buildings survived in Pompeii and Herculaneum for us to see today, the 1st century garden plants of course did not.

However, valuable new evidence has been provided in the last 40 years by the American archeologist, Wilhemina Jashemski (1910-2007), particularly in her two volume book - The Gardens of Pompeii, Herculaneum and the Villas Destroyed by Vesuvius.

Prof Jashemski was the first person to undertake the systematic excavation and study of those gardens. In Pompeii, of 1800 houses, 450 had gardens, but many were looted or destructively excavated. Prof Jashemski found eight that were relatively untouched. To find out what was planted in each, she used identification of root systems, debris and pollen.

Her method for establishing what plants had been in a garden by examining ancient roots is particularly interesting. After the plants died following the eruption of Vesuvius, as the roots decayed, volcanic debris ("lapilli") gradually filled the cavities, so the form of the roots was preserved by the filling of volcanic material. Prof Jashemski cleared the lapilli to the 79 AD level and could see where the ancient roots began. She carefully removed the lapilli from the cavities, reinforced the cavities with wire and then filled them with plaster or cement. This gave a cast with the shape of the ancient root, which could be identified by botanical specialists.

The first garden to which she applied this methodology was at the House of Julius Polybius in Pompeii. There was a peristyle measuring 10 m by 10 m. She took root casts and also had the carbonised wood, seeds, nuts and fruit analysed. She concluded that at the time of the eruption of Mt Vesuvius, the peristyle garden contained two fig trees that were 30 to 35 years old, two cherry/pear/apple trees, and one olive tree. All were productive. In fact, Prof Jashemski found near them the carbonised wood of what may well have been a ladder that was abandoned in the garden when Mt Vesuvius erupted at harvest time. The fruit trees were pruned high enough to allow plantings under them, at least round the edges. She also found evidence of citrus trees espaliered against the garden wall. There was a small amount of purely ornamental planting.

The descriptions that Pliny the Younger left of his large villa gardens had given later readers the idea that ancient gardens were all formal and symmetrical. However, Prof Jashemski's work transformed our understanding. Only one of the domestic gardens she examined had a formal, symmetrical arrangement. Generally, the Pompeian peristyle was planted informally with evergreens and herbs, with a few flowers to lend colour, and in five of the eight gardens she studied there were trees, even though the gardens were small.

The garden was a place for socialising, for private meetings, for contemplation and for eating outdoors. Women wove in the colonnades (where loom weights have been found). There is evidence of pets - dogs and tortoises. The garden also provided a peaceful scene that could be viewed from indoors. A garden was a source of interest and pride for the householder. If a house was short of space, it would contain a miniature garden or there would be a wall painting of a garden in the atrium. It was important to the Romans of the 1st century AD to have one's own garden or the illusion of a garden.

Prof Minchin concluded that, though we tend to think of the ancient Romans in the context of war, gladiatorial contests and ruthless conquest, there is another side to them. We should also think of the Romans at home with their window boxes and their houses built around green, leafy gardens.

A bit of history

Cenno storico

by Yvette Devlin

At the battle of the Catalaunian Plains in September 451 a coalition led by the Roman general Flavius Aetius and the Visigothic king Theodoric I defeated the Huns and their allies led by their leader Attila. The victory stopped the Huns from conquering Roman Gaul (present-day France) but could not stop the looting and pillaging. The Huns were an Asian warrior people of Siberian origin who started its incursions in Europe in the 4th century. Attila died in 453 and the following year the Huns were destroyed by a German coalition. The Western Roman empire itself fell in 476 when Odoacer, an Italian military leader, deposed the last Roman emperor Romulus Augustus and assumed the title of King of Italy.

Nella battaglia dei Campi Catalaunici del settembre 451 una coalizione guidata dal generale romano Flavio Ezio e il re Visigoto Teodorico I sconfisse gli Unni ed i loro alleati guidati da Attila. La vittoria impedì agli Unni di conquistare la Gallia (l'attuale Francia), ma non di saccheggiarla. Gli Unni erano un popolo guerriero asiatico di origine siberiana che sin dal IV secolo fece incursioni in Europa. Attila morì nel 453 e l'anno seguente gli Unni furono distrutti da una coalizione germanica. E nel 476 l'Impero Romano d'Occidente cadde quando Odoacre, un generale d'etnia germanica, depose l'ultimo Imperatore Romano Romolo Augusto ed assunse il titolo di Re d'Italia.

Attila the Hun, was the ruler of the Huns from 434 until his death in March 453. He was a leader of the Hunnic Empire, which stretched from the Ural River to the Rhine River and from the Danube River to the Baltic Sea

Una strage da non dimenticare

di Luigi Catizone

Quel sabato mattina era una calda giornata estiva e, come tutti i sabati, lavoravamo in ospedale, a Bologna, fino alle 13.00, poi sarebbe rimasto solo il medico di guardia.

Alle 11.00 circa arrivò l'ordine per tutto il personale sanitario di non lasciare il posto di lavoro fino a nuovo ordine: c'era stato uno scoppio alla stazione ferroviaria di Bologna e, temendo molti feriti, tutta la sanità bolognese doveva essere pronta a far fronte all'emergenza. Quindi tutti allertati.

Si cercò di capire subito di cosa si trattasse e quale fossero state le modalità e l'entità dello scoppio, usando la radio e la televisione. Non c'era internet e non c'erano telefoni cellulari e quindi le informazioni si diffondevano più lentamente.

Noi medici cercammo di immaginare cosa fare nel caso fossero arrivati alcuni feriti, perché per il nostro reparto era una circostanza del tutto straordinaria. Immaginammo una organizzazione possibile: che materiale ci potesse servire, se ne avessimo a sufficienza, come collegarci con altri reparti? E tante altre ipotesi operative.

Piano piano si ebbero altre notizie: era scoppiata una bomba alle 10.25 e tutta un'ala della stazione ferroviaria era crollata. Molti morti e moltissimi feriti. In lontananza cominciarono a sentirsi le sirene dei mezzi di soccorso.

Ma come, proprio il sabato, nel periodo del massimo esodo estivo, con molta gente in giro e con la stazione affollatissima?

85 vittime e 200 feriti: questo il bilancio di uno dei più gravi atti terroristici del secondo dopoguerra

Bologna, sabato 2 agosto 1980, ore 10.25

Una strage da non dimenticare

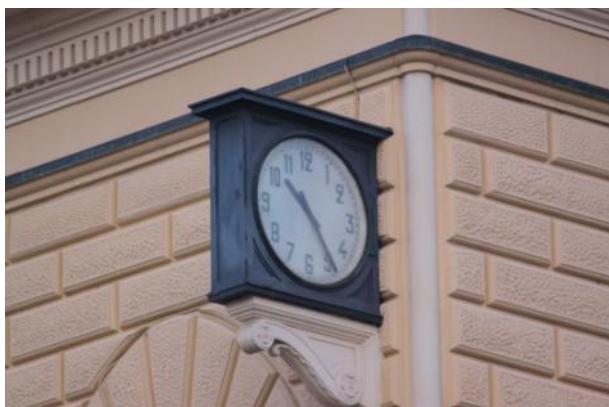

di Luigi Catizone - continua

Sembrava un brutto sogno.

Sgomento, paura, rabbia, dolore e compassione per le vittime erano alcuni dei sentimenti che percorrevano l'animo di tutti. Ci sarà qualcuno che si conosce tra i morti e i feriti? A questa domanda, che tutti ci facevamo, nessuno poteva rispondere e si cercava di pensare ad altro. Molti cercavano di chiamare la propria casa, per avere notizie dei propri familiari ed eventualmente per raccogliere altre informazioni.

Mia moglie e mia figlia di tre anni erano in Calabria, lontane da Bologna.

Da quel sabato 2 agosto 1980 l'orologio della stazione ferroviaria di Bologna segna le 10.25. Per non dimenticare mai cosa successe quel giorno

Verso le 14.00 arrivò la notizia che potevamo lasciare l'ospedale. L'organizzazione della città subito posta in essere dava sufficienti garanzie, almeno fino a quel momento. Noi della Nefrologia non eravamo comunque un reparto di primo intervento, ma eventualmente ci sarebbe stato bisogno di noi nei giorni successivi. E questo avvenne quando, dopo circa una settimana, due feriti gravi ebbero complicanze renali e furono trasferiti da noi.

Mentre tornavo a casa, volli passare dalla zona della stazione ferroviaria. Naturalmente tutta l'area era transennata, c'erano moltissimi soccorritori e non avevano bisogno di altre persone che dessero una mano. Nel via vai delle ambulanze, e da lontano, si riusciva a vedere uno spettacolo indescrivibile di distruzione di ampiezza inimmaginabile, ancora nella polvere, come dopo un bombardamento aereo.

Rientrai a casa, tranquillizzai mia moglie in Calabria per telefono e cercai di avere notizie dalla radio e dalla televisione. Nel pomeriggio e in tarda serata ritornai in stazione. Ovviamente l'opera di soccorso continuava ancora alacremente.

Alla fine la situazione divenne chiara in tutta la sua tragicità: erano stati fatti scoppiare 25 chilogrammi di tritolo nella sala d'attesa della stazione ferroviaria e il bilancio finale era di 85 morti e 200 feriti. La strage più grave in Italia dalla fine della II Guerra Mondiale. Tutta Bologna rispose in maniera veramente encomiabile, tanto che il 13 luglio 1981 il Capo dello Stato Sandro Pertini le consegnò la medaglia d'oro al valore civile per la prova di "democratica fermezza e civile coraggio" data dalla città in occasione "del criminale attentato terroristico del 2 agosto 1980".

La stazione ferroviaria fu ricostruita e già alla cerimonia commemorativa nel primo anniversario nell'agosto del 1981 aveva assunto il suo aspetto originario. A memoria dell'evento rimangono una lapide con i nomi dei morti nella sala d'attesa della stazione e l'orologio che segna, a futura memoria, sempre l'ora alla quale si era fermato al momento dello scoppio: le 10 e 25.

Bologna, sabato 2 agosto 1980, ore 10.25

Una strage da non dimenticare

di Luigi Catizone - continua

Dopo lunghe indagini, rese ancora più difficili da gravissimi depistaggi fatti da alcuni infedeli funzionari dei servizi segreti italiani, sono stati faticosamente individuati e condannati all'ergastolo gli esecutori materiali della strage. Sono due giovani di estrema destra, responsabili anche di molti altri omicidi. Purtroppo ancora non si conosce una verità giudiziaria circa i reali mandanti della strage.

Ogni anno, il 2 agosto, si tiene una cerimonia commemorativa con autorità nazionali e cittadine, con i sopravvissuti e i familiari delle vittime e soprattutto con tantissimi cittadini comuni. Anche quest'anno, il 35° anniversario, si è svolta la cerimonia e qui ricordiamo e documentiamo l'avvenimento.

Ancora una volta è stata sottolineata con forza, in particolare dal Presidente dell'Associazione dei Familiari delle Vittime, "la mancata individuazione dei mandanti e anche il fatto che gli esecutori, condannati per questo ed altri reati a 7 ergastoli a testa ed altre centinaia di anni di carcere per reati gravissimi, sono già completamente liberi da anni, avendo scontato in media solo 2 mesi di carcere per ogni morte causata". Questo accade per un indiscriminato garantismo e per leggi ancora inidonee ad affrontare situazioni di tale gravità.

Ci auguriamo che presto, essendo stato di recente tolto il segreto di Stato su molti documenti riguardanti questo avvenimento, si possa arrivare ad una verità accertata e definitiva, individuando anche i mandanti della strage.

Intanto, non dimentichiamo!

Dante Musica Viva - Know your choir

Profile of Angela Finnegan, OAM

by Francesco Sofo and Angela Finnegan

Introduction by Professor Francesco Sofo

It is my honour as the Musical Director of the DMV to introduce Angela Finnegan to you who is our key musician and repetiteur. The DMV has become quite a different choir with the arrival of Angela. Angela's contribution as a professional accompanist, repetiteur and critic is unique. She has become the backbone of the musical accompaniment and invaluable to the choir learning new songs. Perhaps the choir's most important performance in its ten years of existence will be the Llewellyn Hall 5th September Gala Fundraising Concert for the neonatal intensive care unit at the Canberra Hospital. Angela's high level professionalism, her refined experience and her meticulous and methodical approach to helping choir members learn their parts for the eight songs to be performed at the Gala Concert is much appreciated by each choir member. Angela contributes to the choir's success at every level, always endeavouring to assist in raising the level of performance and application appropriate to all of our performances. Everyone appreciates her high standard and caring approach. She brings amazing talent and high energy to our rehearsals and performances.

Angela's musical career

Angela Finnegan was born in Western Australia where she commenced her musical studies and participated in many facets of the music world of Perth.

She accompanied singers and conducted the choir of the Guild of Young Artists which regularly broadcast over the ABC. For some years she was organist at St Mary's Cathedral Perth.

While in Darwin she supported local productions of the Darwin Amateur Musical Comedy Society. Upon coming to Canberra she was a founding member of the Canberra Opera Group, the forerunner of the Canberra Opera Society. Angela was repetiteur for a number of opera productions. She also accompanied many performances of the ACT Lieder Society.

Angela,
our DMV's piano player

For many years Angela was Convenor of the Piano Division of the Australian National Eisteddfod and she accompanied many vocal performers both in junior and senior sections of the Eisteddfod. She was made a Life Member of the Eisteddfod Society in 1986.

She contributed to the schools her children attended by training and accompanying school choirs. She was organist in her parish church for over 25 years.

In retirement Angela has maintained a contribution to music by accompanying the Dante Alighieri Choir and a U3A choir, and regularly entertaining residents of Mirinjani Nursing Home.

Angela was awarded the Medal of the Order of Australia in 2001 for her contribution to music and to the community.

Eduardo De Filippo

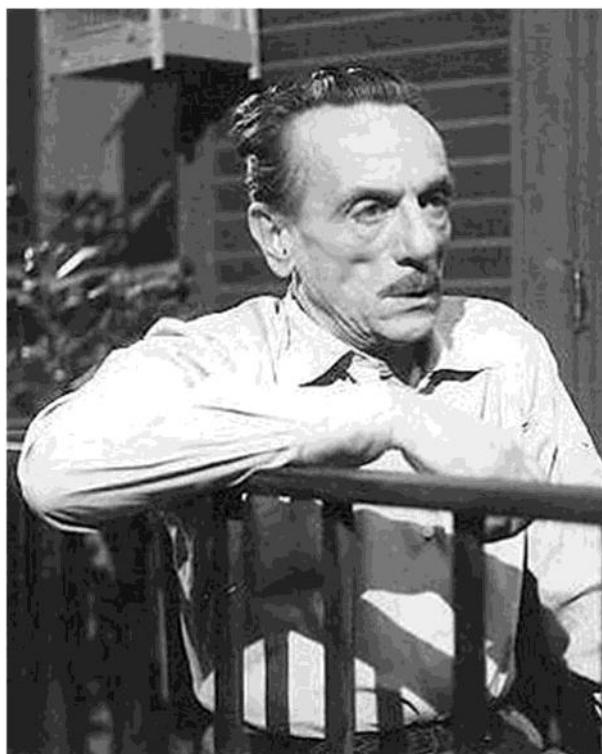

Un commediografo e attore ineguagliabile

di Luigi Catizone

L’Italia è da tutti definita meravigliosa, con una storia che non ha eguali al mondo. Purtroppo noi italiani stiamo facendo di tutto per rovinarla. Gli avvenimenti negativi e gravi sono purtroppo tanti e sono anche quelli che fanno notizia, anche all’estero, perché probabilmente sono proprio quelli che meritano le prime pagine.

Da quando vivo in Australia noto con sempre maggiore dolore, e anche rabbia, questa condizione. Ho però moltissima fiducia nel fatto che la situazione possa cambiare, in meglio, e ci sono molti segnali importanti in questa direzione che dobbiamo cogliere e valorizzare. Proprio per questo voglio invitare tutti gli italo-australiani a conservare fiducia e sentire orgoglio verso l’Italia.

Da un anno circa cerco di indicare sulla Dante Review italiani di cui andare orgogliosi, specie se poco conosciuti. La mia è solo la segnalazione di un personaggio, certamente non esaustiva, sperando di suscitare nei lettori curiosità e interesse per successivi personali approfondimenti.

Dopo Claudio Abbado, Peppino Impastato e Don Lorenzo Milani, voglio parlarvi di Eduardo De Filippo, commediografo ed attore di valore assoluto che ha parlato di Napoli e dell’animo napoletano rendendoli universali e comprensibili a tutti, sebbene scrivesse per lo più in dialetto. Solo con il passare degli anni cominciò a scrivere commedie anche in italiano, ma ricche comunque di espressioni e modi di dire napoletani.

Eduardo, come tutti lo chiamavano, nacque a Napoli nel 1900 ed era figlio naturale dell’attore Eduardo Scarpetta e di Luisa De Filippo. Giovanissimo, cominciò a calcare le scene in commedie scritte dal padre, assieme ai fratelli Peppino e Titina, anch’essi attori molto conosciuti e amati.

Con la sua maschera scavata e di grande espressività ha rappresentato, spesso con un amaro sorriso ironico, i dolori, le passioni, le meschinità e le viltà dell’animo umano. Nei primi decenni del Novecento si formò nella tradizione di un teatro napoletano molto vivace, lavorando con le principali compagnie del momento. Iniziava anche a scrivere le sue prime commedie che traevano sempre spunto dalla vita quotidiana, talvolta in maniera farsesca. La prima fu del 1920 e si intitolava “Farmacia di turno”.

Nel 1917 i tre fratelli De Filippo formarono per la prima volta una compagnia, ma la loro convivenza artistica durò pochissimi mesi.

Eduardo con il grande e mitico Totò

Eduardo continuò comunque a recitare nelle più importanti compagnie teatrali degli anni Venti e Trenta. Solo nel 1931, i tre De Filippo si rimisero insieme e proprio in quell'anno avvenne la prima rappresentazione di "Natale in casa Cupiello". Questa è una amara commedia, con aspetti anche comici e farseschi, che si svolge nei giorni intorno a Natale e tratta della condizione di incomunicabilità e dei contrasti in una famiglia. È tuttora una delle commedie di Eduardo più rappresentate e apprezzate anche all'estero.

Il sodalizio con i fratelli durò, con vicende alterne, fino al 1944, quando vi fu la rottura definitiva per dissensi artistici e neppure in punto di morte avverrà la loro riappacificazione.

Eduardo, Titina e Peppino De Filippo

Nel 1945 Eduardo scrisse "Napoli milionaria". Si tratta di una commedia amarissima che rappresenta la vita in un 'basso' napoletano di una famiglia che viene travolta dagli eventi della guerra e costretta ad 'arrangiarsi' per sopravvivere, perdendo la dignità e la morale. Solo alla fine, per drammatici avvenimenti, la famiglia riesce a riscattarsi e a riprendere una decorosa esistenza. Proprio in "Napoli Milionaria" un personaggio pronuncia una frase ormai diventata celebre - "Ha da passà 'a nuttata" (deve passare la notte) - che ben si può adattare alla situazione italiana a cui accennavo prima. Nel 1950 venne girato anche un film tratto da questa commedia con la regia dello stesso Eduardo. Come tutte le sue opere, anche questa fu rappresentata in molti paesi europei, ma la rappresentazione forse più importante fu quella che ebbe luogo nel 1972 a Londra, dove rimase a lungo in cartellone.

Nel 1946 fu rappresentata per la prima volta "Filumena Marturano" che è forse la commedia più bella, profonda, commovente e maggiormente rappresentata a livello internazionale. Eduardo stesso ne trasse un film nel 1951, ma molto più famoso è stato quello fatto da Vittorio De Sica nel 1964, dal titolo "Matrimonio all'italiana", interpretato da Sofia Loren e Marcello Mastroianni. La commedia fu tradotta e rappresentata in numerosissime lingue e, nella versione inglese del 1977, fu interpretata a Londra da Joan Plowright e Laurence Olivier, con la regia di Franco Zeffirelli. Nel 1979 la stessa Plowright, dopo due stagioni di successo a Londra, la interpretò a Broadway con la regia del marito Laurence Olivier.

Filumena è un'ex-prostituta, che, dopo 25 anni di convivenza con don Mimì, del quale ha amministrato la casa e i beni come e più di una moglie, fingendosi moribonda, si fa sposare sul letto di morte. Alla fine della cerimonia nuziale, Filomena dichiara l'inganno e annuncia di aver fatto questo perché ha tre figli di cui non ha mai rivelato l'esistenza, uno dei quali è di Don Mimì. Questi cerca a lungo di identificare suo figlio, ma senza successo, e Filumena non lo dirà mai. Alla fine Mimì cede alle ragioni di Filumena e li accetta e adotta tutti e tre. È un inno all'amore materno e al valore dei figli, racchiuso nella celeberrima frase di Filumena: “E figlie so’ figlie e so’ tutt’eguale!” (i figli sono figli e sono tutti uguali).

Le Commedie scritte da Eduardo sono state in totale 42 e tra queste ricordiamo Questi fantasmi (1946), De Pretore Vincenzo (1957), Sabato, domenica e lunedì (1959), Il Sindaco del rione Sanità (1960), Gli esami non finiscono mai (1973).

Molti sono stati i lavori di Eduardo per il cinema, come attore, regista e sceneggiatore. Ha scritto anche numerose poesie.

Nel 1948 investì tutti i suoi risparmi nell'acquisto e nella ricostruzione del Teatro San Ferdinando di Napoli, semidistrutto dalla guerra. Salvaguardò la facciata settecentesca e realizzò un teatro tecnicamente all'avanguardia. Fu inaugurato il 22 gennaio 1954 ed Eduardo vi interpretò molte delle sue opere, ma mise anche in scena testi di altri autori napoletani con lo scopo di dare al Teatro napoletano una platea e un ambiente adeguati.

Eduardo mantenne un costante impegno politico e sociale che si concretizzò nel 1979 nella fondazione a Firenze della scuola di Drammaturgia per giovani autori. Nel 1981 ottenne la Cattedra di Drammaturgia presso l'Università la Sapienza di Roma e nello stesso anno venne nominato senatore a vita dal presidente della Repubblica Sandro Pertini, impegnandosi anche in Senato, oltre che sul palcoscenico, per i ragazzi minorenni rinchiusi negli istituti di pena.

Il figlio Luca, anche lui ottimo attore, mantiene tuttora viva la tradizione teatrale del padre.

Vorrei concludere questo purtroppo del tutto insufficiente ritratto di un grande Uomo del Teatro Italiano con le parole da lui stesso pronunciate nel suo ultimo discorso pubblico tenuto al Teatro Antico di Taormina il 1984: “[...] è stata tutta una vita di sacrifici e di gelo! Così si fa il teatro. Così ho fatto! Ma il cuore ha tremato sempre tutte le sere! E l'ho pagato, anche stasera mi batte il cuore e continuerà a battere anche quando si sarà fermato”.

Infine una frase che forse ben rappresenta la napoletanità di Eduardo: “Essere superstiziosi è da ignoranti, ma non esserlo porta male”.

Eduardo De Filippo morì a Roma nella notte tra il 31 ottobre ed il 1° novembre 1984.

On sunflowers and learning Italian

Sui girasoli e l'italiano

by Peter Lahy

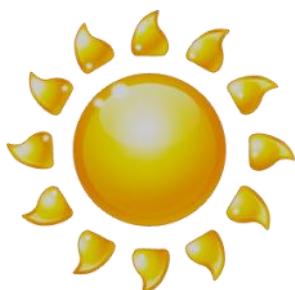

I grew up on a farm near Wakool not far from the Murray River in the south west Riverina. It was an irrigation farm. Dad and mum grew rice and ran sheep. In the fifties and sixties the area around the Wakool district was overwhelmingly Anglo-Saxon. However, at Tullakool we had some Italian neighbours, also farmers. We kids used to go into the school at the nearby town of Barham on the bus. Our Italian neighbours' farm faced a lane along which we rode our bikes to the bus stop. They grew vegetables and flowers in front of their house. I think it was the first time in my life that I saw a row of sunflowers. Even as a young child I was conscious of how the flowers moved from the time I got on the bus in the morning till the time that I got off the bus in the afternoon after school. I thought that their size and colour and the way they moved was amazing. However, it was to be practically a life time later that I was to learn the Italian word for sunflower - girasole, which literally means something like turns with the sun - 'sun turner'. It is a beautiful word and so easy to remember, and brings back childhood memories. I think learning the word for sunflower epitomised for me one of the truly pleasurable things about learning a language, that is, obtaining a real appreciation of the way in which often quite beautiful and visual words come to be constructed. That is something I was not really aware of as a child when I learned so many English words. They were just words that you came to know unconsciously. But the process of learning Italian has really opened my eyes to this delightful aspect of language. How vivid and beautiful are even commonplace words like 'portavoce' (spokesman) and 'capolavoro' (masterpiece)! It is really one of the things that keeps me persevering with learning Italian.
